Nearly 9 percent of all nonfarm workers in the United States work for a manufacturer, but manufacturing has played an outsized role in recent economic recovery. Some states are more closely tied to production than others, and in several states, a large percentage of overall employment is devoted to working for a manufacturer.

The map shows what percentage of each state’s workforce is employed in manufacturing in 2017, using the average for the year.